Overview

The economic development of China is attracting increasing attention from academics, policy makers, and practitioners; entrepreneurship is a crucial building block within this process. Accordingly, the Editors of this Special Issue invite theoretically and empirically informed submissions which illustrate the analytical and empirical understanding of the role and contribution of entrepreneurial activities and the emerging small business sector to economic development and change in the Chinese economy. Some suggested, but not an exhaustive list of topics, would include:

- Entrepreneurial finance
- Role of venture capital and angel finance in new venture development
- The influence of family dynamics upon small business management
- The impact of prevailing local institutional norms and barriers on small business management
- Innovation, R&D and entrepreneurial strategies
- Impact of government policy on small business management
- Survival and growth strategies for small businesses

We welcome studies of the Greater China region, including mainland China, Taiwan, Macao and Hong Kong, as well as comparative studies between them and other emerging economic entities.

The Guest Editors would also like to draw attention to a related conference on entrepreneurship, and small business in China, organized in conjunction with Peking University HSBC Business School in Shenzhen, China scheduled for August 25-26, 2012. [Link: <http://www.chinadrcenter.org/>]. The scientific committee invites submissions specific to the Chinese setting, related to the indicative list above. Presentations at the conference will be considered for the Special Edition; thus, the conference is intended to aid the development of papers. However, final acceptances will be drawn from all submissions, and will be subject to an anonymous double blind review process.
